

On 3/16/22, I attended my first meet up event related to Data Engineering, which was hosted by Data Engineering San Diego.

At this meet up, the major part was a presentation, "Data lifecycle management -- Applying Engineering Best Practices for data", given by Itai David, a software engineer with Treeverse. In the presentation, he mainly introduced lakeFS, an open source project that enables managing data the same way as code.

This meeting was mainly for technical exchanges and didn't provide many opportunities for me to know people. But I did learn something. I plan to attend more similar activities.
